

Spot the difference?

Above is the traditional layout of arterial routes across Edinburgh from the 1700s to the late 20th Century, with Princes Street the major route East to West, which is the map many people picture when the talk is of 'getting back to normal' .

But below in 2012 Google already know what most people don't, that Princes Street has disappeared as a major route and it isn't coming back. While progress is inevitable and desirable it cannot be right to simply cut the main road and hand it to the tram, then leave the traffic to find it's own way across the city.
